isaves us but the seisstion of one act. "Whereas, was exists by the act of Mexico." We are therefore left to exists by the act of Mexico." We are therefore left to exhouse the act of Arista in crossing the Rio Grande, as an act of invasion equivalent to the commencement of an act of invasion equivalent to the commencement of hostillities in which case the act of President Polk in marching the forces of Cot. Taylor to the Rio Grande, was the immediate provocation to the war. This settles the hash, so far as Col. Polk is concerned. The primary one was the annexation of Texas, in the consummation of which Mr. (alhoun was the chief agent. This clinches the war upon Mr. Calhoun. Congress, apprised by John M. Clayton, renewing the order to Colonel Taylor, refuse to countermand it, and this fastens the consuprobandi upon Congress.

But there is one point in this business which has not yet been explained—one question which has not yet been answered. Had General Taylor instructions, in the event of an attack on this side of the Rio Grande, and the repulse of the enemy to pursue them across the river and occupy the town of Matamoras in the enemy's tarritory. The military policy of the movement is conceded, and cannot be questioned; but had he instructions to that end? If so, the position assumed in front of Matamoras, may be taken as a challenge to an attack from the Mexicans, with a view of affording a military Account for the invasion of Mexico, pre-ordained and determined in the march to the Bravo; and if so predetermined we may assume it was for the purpose of enlarging the area of freedom by force of arms. If no such instructions were given, the Administration is thus far absolved.

We think there is a clue to this feature of the case.—

determined, we may assume it was not a part in o such instructions were given, the Administration is thus far absolved.

We think there is a clue to this feature of the case.—In December, 1845, Gen. Cass, in the Senate, proposed a restriction of the committees to prepare for a war with England in the retention of Oregon to 54 40—the whole or none.—and made a consecution of the probable acquisition of Casifornia by this Administration. He spoke deliberately, He Knew what he was about. He had consulted the Administration and learned its intentions—one of which was the acquisition of California by this Administration. He spoke deliberately, He Knew what he was about. He had consulted the Administration, and learned its intentions—one of which was the acquisition of California. A paper warfare existed at that time between the United States and Mexico. It only needed the collision of an American with a Mexican force, to confirm the already existing state of war. In an actual war Mexico must soon knock under; and in the settlement of a peace, the ceasion of California would be readily required as a fundamental condition. In this view the war may be assumed to have been commenced for the acquisition of California; and the march of Colonel Taylor to the Bravo, ostensibly for the protection of the frontier, may have looked to results far more comprehensive and magnificent.

The fact is incontrovertible, at all events, that the administration, from the start, calculated upon the re-annexation of California. The march of Col. Taylor to the Rio Grande, was designed to act as a persuasive to the reception of Mr. Slidell—it was thought his presence in front of Matamoras, might be an inducement to the Mexicans to negotime, as the only medium of escaping a positave war with the United States, so powerful in all the elements of war. It was expected that in negotiations thus brought about, the cession of California in quit-claim for indemnities, would be easily attainable. In December, 1843, the administration did not dream of o cession.

The war exists by act of the American Congress; by act of the President; by the acts of Paredes; by the act of Slidell; by the act of Arista; by the acts of Mr. Calhoun and John Tyler, and by the act of Gen. Taylor. The results it is impossible to foresee, but they will have been in the end rather costly to the United States, and of incalculable benefit to Mexico.

State of the Flour Market.

Philadelphia, May 7.—The receipts of the foreign news by the Calcdonia at Boston, has since unsettled the market, and holders now generally ask $7.50 for standard thrands. The only 'sales, however, are about 1000 barrels, mostly Western, at $7.25, part to arrive in four or five days, which price has also been offered for fair shipping brands, of which the market is nearly bare. For city use sales are to a moderate extent at $7.87.50 for good and extra retailing brands. Rye flour in fair request; 2500 bbls sold principally at $4.87%, closing with a good demand at $4.91 a $5, but now held higher; we quote at $5.12%. Corn meal was also freely taken, and some 5000 bbls sold, mostly Pennsylvania, at $4.60, and Brandy wine at $4.62%, leaving but little in market. Holders now ask $4.75 for Pennsylvania with $4.62% of fered. To-day the markets in wheat have advanced, and some sales are reported at a price to be fixed. We quote nominally at 5 a 10c advance. Rye—5000 bushels Pennsylvania sold at 90 a 92c weight. Corn scarce and wanted; we notice sales of 35.000 bushels, chiefly Pennsylvania yellow, at 96c a $1, all weight, including Southern at the same rates, closing firmly at our highest figure. Oats in demand. 1500 bushels sold at 51 a 52c for Southern and 53 a 54c for Pennsylvania and North River.
